I wouldnt recommend this marker if there are other choices. It is great for shooting cans in a backyard. It is great for shooting cans in a backyard. It was my first marker and i have nothing but complaints. I called it lightening because this marker never shot a steady paintball stream, the balls never went in. It was my first marker and i have nothing but complaints. I called it lightening because this marker never shot a steady paintball stream, the balls never went in the same direction, or would never strike the same place twice. Constantly chopped paint. I can not in all honesty tell you. I can not in all honesty tell you that its good. But, for a beginner playing woodsball, particularly against other players of the same skill level, this marker is sufficient. And so long as you are not shooting too fast it will work pretty decently. But as you will likely be using CO2 with it shooting too fast will cause the marker to freeze up.literally. And it makes no sense to use an HPA tank with this is most HPA tanks cost more then this marker package anyhow. Not at all very accurate, especially if any oil or debris gets in the barrel. Overall its good for backyard play or beginner games.and those only. Brummer 3.0 out of 5 stars Okay, its not THAT bad, but it still isnt great. I keep it now as a spare if any of my friends want to give paintballing a try. Just a side note, you cant take off the barrel to clean it, you have to run the thingy through where the paintballs are fed into the gun, and out the barrel. What can I say You get what you paid for Was surprised how well it performed. It is not an A5 but for 10% of the price I was shocked how close the performance was. Definately worth having for a loaner or for casual play. I bought this with the plans to A cpl buddies wanted to mess around with some CTF type stuff in the woods so we picked up some Tstorms Not too long ago I was going to purchase the VL High Voltage and simply switch the grip out with my Avenger 3. but it was sold. So I It needs one piece to be complete a 1way HPA fill nipple Basically, gas it up, cock it, load 1 paintball, and stash I notice that my Staingray II barrel has a groove around the whole barrel.

Looking at items like the Lapco Barrel adapter, But being into all the modding era. So that's the first thing I tested the gun before purchasing and it would not cock. It looked pretty grimey so wrote it off as needing cleaned. It has Dark Horizons said they're not setup to run custom jobs at this time. Not improvising one out of a beat up old used gun, but from brand new parts. Well, I've gotten very close to finishing it the way I want it, It's been hectic for quite awhile, and I seem to spend much more time fixing the computers in the house than My conclusion is that the oring on the hose is damaged It has been modded and tweaked out. This thing rocks. No more CO2 spray.

Designed specifically for the antitank role, the Avenger delivers very powerful rounds at a high rate of fire. Both of the AX prototypes, the YA10 and the Northrop YA9, were designed to incorporate the weapon, although it was not available during the initial competition; the M61 Vulcan was used as a temporary replacement. Because the gun plays a significant role in maintaining the A10's balance and center of gravity, a jack must be installed beneath the airplane's tail whenever the gun is removed for inspection in order to prevent the aircraft from tipping rearwards. The projectiles incorporate a plastic driving band to improve barrel life. However, this constant rate of fire would shorten the barrel life considerably and require added barrel inspections and result in shorter intervals between replacement. This arrangement accurately centers the recoil forces, preventing changes in aircraft pitch or yaw when fired. They are the interface between the gun housing and the gun mount.

By absorbing in compression the recoil forces, they spread the time of the recoil impulse and counter recoil energy transmitted to the supporting structure when the gun is fired. The A10 engines now have a self-sustaining combustion section. The Avenger also forms the basis for the Dutch-developed Goalkeeper CIWS naval air defence gun. World Air Power Journal. p. 18.
